The OTR factoring advantage:

Optimizing invoice payments for trucking companies

wex®

Introduction

In today's fast-paced world, how quickly you can deliver product is paramount. Mega-retailers like Amazon and Walmart have conditioned consumers to expect rapid fulfillment, fueling a global demand for same-day delivery that is expected to reach $20.36 billion by 2027. The backbone of this movement? Trucking companies. However, while the need for trucking services continues to grow, the financial challenges facing many fleets remain significant—especially when it comes to cash flow.

For small- to mid-sized trucking fleets operating on tight profit margins, waiting an average of 40 days for invoice payments can be a major strain. But what if there was a way to get paid faster, keep trucks on the road, and streamline financial operations? That's where OTR factoring comes in.

This e-book will break down factoring solutions, explain how they work, and debunk common misconceptions so you can determine if factoring is the right financial tool for your trucking business.

Chapter 1:

What is factoring in trucking?

Factoring is a financing tool that allows trucking companies to sell their unpaid invoices to a factoring company in exchange for an immediate cash advance. This provides much-needed working capital without taking on debt.

How factoring works

1. The carrier delivers its load and invoices the customer.
2. Instead of waiting weeks for payment, the carrier sells the invoice to a factoring company for an advance (typically 85–95% of the invoice value).
3. The factoring company collects payment from the customer.
4. Once the customer pays, the factoring company releases the remaining balance, minus a small factoring fee.

According to the International Factoring Association, “Factoring allows you to use your own hard-earned assets to create cash for the growth needs of your company.” Unlike traditional loans, factoring is based on the creditworthiness of your customers, rather than your business’s credit score.

Chapter 2:

Types of factoring

There are two primary types of factoring: recourse and non-recourse. Understanding the difference between them is key to choosing the best option for your business.

Recourse factoring

- The trucking company is responsible if the customer does not pay.
- Lower factoring fees and higher advance rates.
- Easier to qualify for, making it ideal for companies with creditworthy clients.

Non-recourse factoring

- The factoring company assumes the risk if the customer doesn't pay (usually due to bankruptcy within a specific time frame).
- Higher factoring fees and lower advance rates.
- Beneficial for trucking companies working with higher-risk customers.

Chapter 3:

The benefits of factoring

Factoring offers trucking companies several advantages beyond just faster payments.

1 Improved cash flow

With immediate access to cash, carriers can cover expenses such as fuel, payroll, maintenance, and expansion costs.

2 Reduced administrative burden

Factoring companies handle invoicing and collections, freeing up time and resources so managers can focus on operations.

3 Fuel savings

Some factoring companies, like WEX, offer additional perks such as fleet cards that provide discounts on fuel, hotels, and other essential expenses.

For example, the Fleet One EDGE card offers:

- No fuel transaction fees at 4,000+ in-network locations.
- Substantial fuel discounts at 2,000+ sites.
- Universal acceptance at 12,000+ truck stops nationwide.
- Free fuel card funding with WEX Capital.

Chapter 4:

Common misconceptions about factoring

Despite its benefits, some trucking companies hesitate to use factoring due to misconceptions. Let's debunk some of the most common ones.

Misconception #1

Factoring is too expensive

Factoring fees are typically a small percentage of the invoice (often around 4%). In return, carriers gain immediate cash flow, plus administrative services such as credit checks, load boards, and collections management.

Misconception #2

Only companies with excellent credit can use factoring

Factoring companies focus on the creditworthiness of your customers—not your business. Many offer flexible qualification criteria that allow businesses with less-than-perfect credit to benefit from factoring.

Misconception #3

Factoring locks companies into long-term contracts

While some factoring agreements require a minimum volume commitment, many providers offer flexible terms. Always review contract details before signing to ensure they align with your business needs.

Chapter 5:

Choosing the right factoring partner

Not all factoring companies are created equal. When evaluating your options, consider the following:

- Fee structure: Look for transparent pricing with no hidden fees.
- Advance rates: Compare how much cash you'll receive upfront.
- Customer service: A dedicated support team can make a big difference.
- Additional perks: Some factoring companies offer fuel discounts, fleet cards, or insurance services.

Conclusion:

The value of factoring for your trucking business

In an industry where every mile and minute counts, access to immediate cash flow can make all the difference. OTR factoring helps trucking companies optimize cash flow, reduce administrative headaches, and unlock new growth opportunities.

Whether you're a small trucking business looking to cover day-to-day expenses or a growing operation needing funds for expansion, factoring can be a powerful financial tool to keep your business moving forward.
